Carly Simon rose to fame in the 1970's with back-to-back hit records. She has written many of her own songs and has authored a number of children's books. She had a deep interest in music from childhood and taught herself to play the guitar. She began a music group 'The Simon Sisters' with her sister Lucy. The group enjoyed minor success and made three albums together before Lucy left the band to start a family. Carly went solo in 1971 with her self-titled album 'Carly Simon.' She had her first big hit with her single 'You're So Vain', which remains one of her most successful songs generally regarded as her "signature song." A Grammy Award followed and she became one of the most famous singers of the 1970's decade. Her trail of success continued well into the next decade. Her song 'Let the River Run' (1988) won her three prestigious awards: Grammy Award for 'Best Song Written Specifically for a Motion Picture or Television' (1990); Academy Award for 'Best Song' (1989); and Golden Globe Award for 'Best Original Song' (1989). Simon made her debut as an author with her first children's book 'Amy the Dancing Bear' in 1989. She followed it with 'The Boy of the Bells' (1990) and 'The Fisherman's Song' (1991). Her fourth book 'The Nighttime Chauffeur' was published in 1993. In the new millennium she has released 'Bedroom Tapes' (2000) and 'Christmas is Almost Here' (2002). Some of her other albums during that decade were 'Moonlight Serenade' (2005), 'Into White' (2007), 'Never Been Gone' (2009).
